

■ Crimtech Services Ltd.

Innovative solutions through advanced thinking

An Advocate advertising feature

Established in 1993 and located in Red Deer, Crimtech Services has grown from three employees to a complement of over 25. "We started our company in slow times and we're here to stay," says Craig Nykyforuk, president.

"Our niche," says Nykyforuk, "is providing support services to maintenance and engineering personnel, on small to medium, process and pipeline installations, or modifications."

The company offers a complete line of mechanical, electrical, instrumentation and structural design services in addition to a very strong drafting and drawing management team. To offer these services, Crimtech continues to add engineers and technical personnel, and a large part of these people are from the Red Deer or Central Alberta area.

Craig and his wife Kim, CFO, are also in the process of building a new office complex in Red Deer that will give their company the opportunity to expand further in the next three to five years.

"We like Red Deer," says Craig, "and we are seeing more opportunities coming our way, and to handle the work, we need more space to add to our team."

The company has also been called on to develop solution-based products to satisfy environmental and economic issues facing many oil and gas producers.

One such product is the FloDrip™ Wellhead Separator, which has become very popular for marginal type gas wells. "At about half the cost of a conventional separator package, FloDrip™ makes a lot of sense for wells that are almost uneconomical to produce with past conventional equipment," says Craig. "We had a customer that challenged us with a problem in shallow gas and we worked with them to develop a solution," he says.

Other products being developed and tested at Crimtech are: a more economical solution for three-phase separation, a production tank that is more economical and environmentally friendly, as well as an exciting new drawing management package which will be featured at Petro Chem 99, in Red Deer on Sept. 22-23.

Crimtech Services Ltd. is a dynamic company, providing "production solutions" to their clients and a reputation for innovation is what makes them unique and a company to watch in 2000.